

MY EXPERIENCE WITH DEEP WEB

The internet is more than it appears. Its backdoor access to an underground and untraceable world creates an environment ripe for anonymous activity.

The deep web, or the dark web, is the expanse of the internet that goes beyond traditional search engines such as Google, and is completely untraceable. Because of this, deep web is a hot spot for illegal activity.

According to the Guardian, the deep web is 400 to 500 times larger than the regular internet, which, when searched, only reveals .03 percent of the total web pages available.

The deep web can be accessed only through torrented web pages, which are downloaded by participants through anonymity browsers like Tor, or are sent to participants by those who already have access to them.

The untraceable aspect of the deep web makes it a hot spot for all sorts of illegal activities.

Durg market

Dream Market, which is a world wide network for selling and buying illegal substances. Each seller has a rating which dictates how good their products are and whether or not they scam their buyers.

Online currency, called Bitcoin, is used for the transactions. Participants buy the Bitcoin and then upload it to their accounts.

Bitcoin is super easy to get, you can download an app and buy it and is legal, you just send it to your account and there is no way to trace it since the website uses encryption.

The seller lists their requirements on the page and has a encrypted code used to insert the address.

To evade any investigation into the purchase, most participants use a P.O box instead of home addresses
